present time fighting with Annam, it is of the first importance to strengthen the river defences. On the 4th month of the present year the French went to Tientain to treat with China. Although a treaty of neace was already arranged, they, nevertheless, dared, on the second and third days of the 5th month and for several days, to make assaults on our soldiers at the bridge of the Goddess of Mercy in Leung Shan. We had no resource except to resist their onelaught and our soldiers on that occasion completely routed the French. France has still many ships of war in Tientsin and her object is to extert large sums of money. It is to be feared that these French, under pretence of peace, desire secretly to spy out the weakness of our defences to take advantage of any want of preparation on our part. This is a most grave and no indifferent matter. We have many times received secret despatches from the Imperial Commissioner and the Viceroy stating the Emperor's commands and calling on those whose post that it is not at all strange she should is near the sea and river defences not to relax their vigilance. Should their ships of war more come to anchor off the land and their soldiers make no movements to attack us you knocking a cook overboard ence or twice will not be permitted to engage them in combat. This you must be careful to observe. We, who have charge of the river defences, have already chosen with great accuracy the position of the soldiers and have so appointed the position that our men can discern the approach of French ships and observe what their tactics are. Our own movements and conduct will regulated by the movements of the French. THE ADVENTURES OF A WAR. CORRESPONDENT.

AN INTERVIEW WITH MR MELTON PRIOR Mr Melton Prior, of the Illustrated London News, may be regarded at the present moment as the doyen of English war correspondents in active work. Dr Russell of Crimean renown, is, of course, the first in the craft, but his days of active service are practically over. Mr Archibald Forbes s in retirement : and as for Mr Cameron who in many respects is the first man of his day, he did not enter the field until after Mr Melton Prior had gone through half a dozen campaigns. Mr Prior entered the profession at the end of 1873, when he left England for the Gold Coast in Sir Garnet Wolseley's expedition, together with Mr H. M. Stanley, Mr Henty, and others. Since that time he has been constantly on the run, travelling round the world at least once, and taking part in no less than eleven campaigns in ten years and a haif. withstanding his exposure to all the risks of Acod and field, to say nothing of shot and shelf, he bears no trace of all the hardships which he has gone through, but aplively and healthy than half the men who pass beneath his office windows in the Strand. He has gone through all his wars without harm, save one wound; but in the Ashantee war he contracted the Ashantes fever, which clings to him to this day, and reminds him by its frequent recurrence of the coast where he received his bantism of fire. In the Russo-Turkish war he had his boot torn off by a shot or shell, inflicting a slight acratch; but it healed much more rapidly than the ugly cut which he received from a fall when at Suakim, and the wound of which was unhealed for months. has thrice been down with quinty, and once came home with rhounatism, which laid Bulgaria, where I was attached to the him up for three weeks. worst on the second day. On the third day you cease to feel hunger, and you begin phies as well-which proves hill to have to lose flesh, but I kept going. Monteverdi suffered more than I as he became almost delirious, and had to be held on his horse. It was the worst time I ever had. Splendid savages were some of those insurgents; although some were perfect gentlemen, others were magnificent brutes. Peko Pavlovitch was one of the latter. He could neither read nor write, stood about 6 ft. C in, wore armour on his body, although personally most courteous to me, was the purest savage I have ever seen in a white skin. I was sitting beside him when a soldier came with a flag of truce from Moukhtar Pasha asking for permission to send victuals to the beleaguered fortress of Govansko. Peko Paylovitch could not gead, but he looked at the paper while the contents were being interpreted to him. He then tore it into fragments, flung the pieces into the mes senger's face, and, waving his hand with a savage expression, declared 'That is my nnawer.' The messenger went down stairs. Before he reached the landing I heard a groan. The man was killed. Another specimen of Peko's mode of warfare which witnessed was an unfortunate Turk, whose back Peko had scored with his knife and ripped off three long atrips of skin with hi hands. The poor wretch was more dead than alive. Simon Bordanovitch was a perfect gentleman; but fighting with Turks on the great hills which run northward from the Black Mountains is no child's play.

nor was there any pretence of making war with rose water in Herzegovina. From there I went in 1876 to replace a colleague at the close of the Servian campaign. Servia is a picturesque country. ut the Servians were poor fighters. Their Rossian officers were gentlemen. The Rusaian volunteers were brave enough. but many of them were not proof to the seductions of raki, any amount of which could be bought at a penny s glass, and aix glasses were quite sufficient to make any one drunk. There was one terrible scene which I witnessed there. When the Servian army was in full retreat from Deligrad it dashed through Porachin. It was a regular saure our peut, and the artillery galloped full speed through the helpless fugitives I saw a child knocked down and ground to death beneath the wheels of the cannon as I was watching the rout. JOHN BULL AND HIS TSLAND. If Christianity consists in going to church, and passing ones life in discussing theological questions, than John Bull is mightily Uhristian; if piety consists in quarrelling over the dogmas, instead of practising the principles, of religion, then the piety of John is unequalled. The craze for religion has come to a mania. Let the religion be good or bad, no matter which it is, or what it is, it is better than none at all. In France, we boast of our foibles, even of many that are not to be found in us; in England, people boast of their virtues, capecially those they do not possess. The Frenchman is the braggart of vice, the Englishman is the hypocrite of virtue. Here, every religious belief is respected : the Shakers, the Ranters, the Peculiar People, the Salvationists; Free-thinkers alone are excluded. When a man wants a situation, he presente himself to his future master as a Christian : he advertises, in the papers, as a total abstainer. If, in France, he recommended himself as a good Christian, he would receive a peremptory kick that would send him straight to paradise.

Every Englishman worships God after his own fashion. There exist here 183 religious sects certified to the Registrar-General. Each of these sects has naturally found the truth. As, unfortunately, no one has ever yet come back from the other peace and plenty in store for the dervishes, the fakirs, and others who live in indelwouce upon the superstition and simplicity to the student.

their religion. Show me the Christian who loves his neighbour as himself; who, when he has been struck on the right check, holds out his left; who forgives his onemies; who does not ask for that which has been taken from him; who does unto others as he would have others do unto

Religion has lost most of its purity and sincerity from ceasing to be private, especially in England, where, owing to competition, to free trade applied to religious matters, every one aims at appearing better than his neighbours. Pray, not standing in the synagogues, nor upon the house-tops, but enter into thy closet and shut the door, say the Scriptures. How many do so?

The Romanists swear by the Pope; the Protestants by Luther and Calvin; the Puritans by John Knox; the Wesleyans by John Wesley; the Salvationists by Mr., Mrs., and Miss Booth; the Baptists of London crowd to the Tabernacle to listen cagerly to every word that falls from Mr Spurgeon's lips. Some people believe themselves saved, if they can only touch the coat tails of Mr Moody or Mr Sankoy. I have seen women press the hands of these evangelists, as they passed through the throng on their way to the platform where they were going to preach, and go away happy. When Catholics have the gout, i is to Our-Lady-of-Lourdes, to Our-Lady-of-Salette, to la bienheureuse Germaine that they go: it is Sainte-Barbo that they implore to protect them from thunder and lightning; the Deity would seem to play a very secondary, part in the religion of all these people. In England, religion is the idea that absorbs and dominates all others. The prisons and mad-houses are full of religious

In France, when we hear of a great crime having been committed, we exclaim: where is the woman ( In England, sift the matter, and you will find a chapel. There are few bankrupts, really worthy of the name, that have not built a church or chapel to win the confidence of investors, and may be, also, to offer to God a little of. that which they had taken from men. On opening my newspaper to-day, I read of an Classifiers and Grammar will be found very individual charged with fraudulent bank- valuable."-China Matt. ruptey. A worthy old lady, who had trusted him with stock, states that she had every confidence in the accused, especially since the day when he had refused a box at the Opera, which she had offered him, with the remark that he was happy to be able to say that he had never set foot in such a

We all remember the sickening professions of religion that Guiteau, the vile and -cowardly assassin of poor President Garfield, made day after day for months. The United-Kingdom possesses two State Churches. The Anglican, Church, in Eng. FOR SALE at Messrs. KELLY & WALSH'S land and Wales; the Presbyterian Church in Scotland. The State Church was abolished in Ireland in 1869. The Anglican Church is under the juris diction of two Archbishops—the Archbishop of Canterbury, primate of England, and the Archbishop of York, and of thirty bishops. The two archbishops and twentyfour bishops have seats in the House of

The Scotch Church is under the jurisdiction of a General Assembly, composed of clorical and lay deputies, and presided over by a Moderator elected annually by the Assembly, and a High Lord Commissioner appointed each year by the Crown. The principal Nonconformist Churches are: the Methodists, the Baptists, the Unitarians, the Congregationalists or Independents, and the Weslevans.

Out of a population of 81,000,000 souls The Celebrated in the United-Kingdom and the Colonies, 18,000,000 belong to the Anglican Church; 14,500,000 are Methodists; 13,500,600 Catholics; 10,250,000, Presbyterians: 8,000,000, Baptists; 6,000,000, Congregationalists; 1,000,000, Unitarians and about 10,000,000 belong to different sects of less importance.

I will give a complete list of the hundred and eighty odd religious sects of England, reserving for special chapters those that present features of special interest.
